- Use: Refer to Archives Reading Room Guidelines
- Notes: Citation Style: "WWII on the Homefront," Record Group 17, Archives, Plymouth Historical Museum

Abstract

The United States joined World War II in December 1941 when Japan bombed Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. In Plymouth, residents faced air raid drills, blackouts, rationed food supplies and the manufacturing of war machines and materials at local factories. The residents grew victory gardens and purchased war bonds to support the war for over four years. World War II ended in May 1945.

Scope and Content

The WWII on the Homefront record group contains records, artifacts and articles related to the War and its effects in Plymouth. The records include pamphlets and handbooks, correspondence, letters, government memos, and wartime guides. The artifacts include ration stamps and books, stationary, and souvenirs. Articles about World War II come from the Detroit Free Press, Detroit News, Plymouth Mail, and other Plymouth area newspapers which printed articles regarding the war later into the 20th century. The collection also contains some photographs and war posters.
